Joy South Africa (SA) Invests in Education

As part of Joy South Africa's socio economic development initiative to provide sustainable learning support for disadvantaged schools, a contribution of approximately R504,680 ($62,680 USD) was recently made to the Jabulani Technical High School in Soweto, near Johannesburg.

A group of twelve learners from Jabulani visited Joy's Steeledale and Wadeville facilities in June 2008.

Kevin Brogan, Managing Director Joy SA, commented that this project is part of a 3-year partnership program between Joy and Jabulani in the investment of skills development, specifically for future engineers. During this period, Joy aims to attract learners who perform to the best of their ability and would like the students to think of Joy SA as a preferred employer for their future.

The sponsorship includes monetary and non-monetary support. The donation will be used in this financial year for renovations, upgrading and the acquisition of new equipment for the school, with annual contributions depending on identified needs over the next two years.

Sibongile Zikalala, Joy SA's Black Economic Empowerment (BEE) Manager, brought the school to our attention through its achievements. Joy is proud and privileged to help this school. As a technical based organization, Joy is dedicated to nurturing much needed young engineering talent and skills in this arena of South Africa.
